District Court Office, King-street East, Sydney, 11th

I am of opinion that her Majesty has no power to introduce into this colony, by her letters patent or otherwise, to the bishopric of Sydney, the law and method of proceeding, by which the bishops in England and Ireland are enabled to enforce discipline over their clergy. I am also of opinion that such law and its proceedings are not by the creation and recognition of the diocese of Sydney and that bishop, being introduced by implication into this colony. For a specific method of dealing with the applicability of English laws to this colony has been provided by statute, and that provision excludes all other means of introducing laws.

be declared by ordinance of the Legislature, or by the Court in the absence of the Legislature, or by the circumstances arise in litigation, judgments which a judicial declaration as to the applicability of English law. It might be that this Court might take the law, or some portion of the English Church law, was applicable to the circumstances of the colony. In that case the Court would declare it to be applicable, and it would then be applied, although the Bishop's letters patent made no mention of, or indicated it by any expression of intention.

The mode of declaring the applicability of the law laws to the circumstances of this colony depend upon the Imperial statute 9 Geo. 4, c. 83, sec. 24, by which it is enacted that "That all laws and statutes in force within the realm of England at the time of the passing of this Act (not being inconsistent herewith, or of any character which may be passed in pursuance hereof), shall be applicable in the administration of justice in the Courts of New South Wales and Van Diemen's Land respectively, so far as the same can be applied without the said colonies; and as often as any doubt shall arise as to the application of any such law or statute in that of the said colonies respectively, and with the advice of the Legislative Councils of the said colonies respectively, by ordinances to be by them for that purpose made it is declared whether such laws or statutes shall be deemed to be related to such colonies, and whether such laws or statutes, or to make and establish such limitations and modifications of any such laws and statutes within the said colonies respectively as may be deemed expedient in that behalf. Provided always, that in the mean time, and before any such ordinance shall be actually made, it shall be the duty of the said Supreme Court, or, as often as any such doubts shall arise upon the titles of the said

Now the laws and statutes by which obedience to the bishops from their clergy is enforced, and the laws of the courts by which those laws are administered, are part of the laws mentioned in the section cited. For all that portion of Church Law is now in force, which has been established, not by any power in legislation, but by the authority of the Church or the Legislature, and which is not in force, but by adoption or institution of the power of the realm. The whole of English Church Law is parcel of the general law of England, and it is compa-

NATURAL LAW. It has arisen wholly by accident, or by chance, or by custom, or by the action of the English Legislature. It is not natural but instituted law. It is no part of that natural law which has been described to be "the rule and dictate of right reason, showing the moral deformity of moral actions, and the rectitude of moral actions according to its antipathesis to a reasonable nature, and the power or authority which gives this law a sanction is the voice of God, through natural reason."

The King's Ecclesiastical Law is no part of that natural law which has been discovered and declared from time to time by the British Legislature.

circumstances for its application have arisen in litigation. Of that law most propositions can be proved by reasoning to be logical consequences from some principle as first truth of natural justice appreciable by all men of the truth of mankind. That law is so universal in its nature as to be applicable to all nations and in all times, and being common to England and all other places, is necessarily carried with them by Englishmen in coming to a colony such as this, or, more properly speaking, to the land and claim to it equally as in the United Kingdom. No statute was necessary to introduce such law into the colony, and it forms no part of "the laws and statutes" mentioned in the

But although the natural law Englished is necessarily the common law of a colony, it by no means follows that the instituted laws are a portion of colonial jurisprudence. For it hath been held (see Blackstone, vol. 1, p. 107) that of an uninhabited country, so discovered and planted by English subjects, all the English laws, and customs, which are the birthright of every subject, are immediately there in force. But this must be understood with very many and very great restrictions. Such colonies as wish to them only so much of the English law as is applicable to their own situation and state of society of an infant colony: such, for instance, as the coastal reguof liberance and of protection from personal injuries. The artificial refinements and distinctions incident to the property of a grant and commercial people; the laws of police and revenue; such especially as relate to the penalties; the mode of maintenance for the established clergy, the jurisdiction of spiritual Courts, and a multitude of other provisions, are neither necessary nor convenient for them, and therefore not in force. What shall be admitted and what rejected, what times, and under what restrictions, must, in case of dispute, be decided in the first instance by their own provincial assemblies, subject to the revision and control of the King in Council.

As no laws have ever been made by the Legislature for the purpose of introducing into this colony the King's Ecclesiastical Law, we have shown that the King's Ecclesiastical Law, or not it is applicable to the circumstances of this territory, in order that we may determine whether the proceedings taken by the defendant against the plaintiff be sustainable.

I am of opinion that the King's Ecclesiastical Law of England has no applicability to the circumstances of this colony. During the rise and progress of that system, all persons in England were supposed to be members of the Established Church. The Church was governed by various statutes to be the church of the whole people. The holders of land were obliged to pay tithes for the support of the members of that church. Parliameters were under the obligation to uphold the fabric and spiritual character of the church. The members of the House of Commons had seats in the Parliament, and formed an estate of the realm. In various ways, too notorious to mention, the church was recognised as an institution by the law, and was by law established. Laws were made or adopted, and willows were cut down for the use of the church.

the clergy, and the laity. But the Christians in this colony, who were or would be members of the Established Church in the United Kingdom, have never in any statute been recognised as being members of a church established here by law, nor are they, as such, the members of the Roman Catholic, Presbyterian, Independent, Unitarian, or Jewish congregations here. Though the colonial Legislature has made special provision for the building of a church, and for the support of ministers of religion, it has in no instance given precedence to the Church of England over other collections of Christians. Having been no direct the Church, to spiritual power—there being no circumstances which would justify the application of the Church of England members to that of the same class of Christians in the United Kingdom—it is obvious that the laws by which the Church of all England is regulated there, can have no applicability to congregations professing the same principles, but relying on baptism and the stresses of the same kind of Church government As the Church law cannot be here applied, the courts by which in England that law has been administered cannot be considered applicable to our circumstances. The right of the Government in the case before us, is to legislate in strict conformity with the laws which apply to its own advised to confer upon his Lordship. The procedure adopted by him is virtually before a judge and a jury of four superior jurats. For the interests of an accused, I am sure, it can hardly be better than the charges preferred by the Ekele, and I can well understand that the right rev. prelate was most anxious to pay every respect to the letters patent of her Majesty, and to proceed by analogy to the ordinary trial by a judge and jury that to exercise the more ancient mode of trial which has been entrusted by the colonial Legislature. But it is the duty of every person to pursue the strict course of law, and not to depart from it, however agreeable the course may be to the feelings of the community.

An argument has been urged against making a rule nisi, of which distinct mention must be made. It is substantially said that the Bishop has, as an individual, requested Sir W. W. Burton, in company with four clergymen, to inquire whether Mr. King has acted as mentioned in the letters of accusation, and to report their opinion to the Lord Bishop. Sir W. W. Burton is a High Church to invite Mr. King to be present at the inquiry, and to nominate two of Sir William's four clerical associates. There is, it has been urged, nothing in all this which the Supreme Court of the colony can prohibit, for as no test is there involved, or anything of the kind, the proceeding is one of open sane terrorism, and there is nothing overt-like in what has been instituted and designed. Nothing, it has been said, has been done but what might have been transacted by private individuals, and the nature of the act cannot be altered by reading into it the appellations by which they have been respectively described. The Bishop's request is no more because his note to Sir

William Merion was called "Letters of Requiem." William's address to the Bishop would be no less poignant he was styled "Chancellor." Nor the opinions of the clergymen of different validity, because they were designated as "Commissaries." Neither was the invitation to Mr. King a whim more anxious, because it was called by the somewhat formidable term citation.

Consequently I was made to reach the argument (which) has been freely reported, which has weighed upon my mind so little. But as Mr. King has sworn that the Bishop intends to deprive him of his salary and other temporal advantages, and as the Bishop has not denied that assertion, I have been obliged to leave the subject.

of his clergy as he unquiet, disobedient, and criminal, and the citation calls on Mr. King to undergo the Bishop's visitation, I cannot but conclude that it was his Lordship
